Summary: Working to solve today's most challenging problems, the Foundation partners with a diverse range of public and private organizations who share our commitment to new ways of thinking and new forms of action for improving society. The Pew Health Group seeks to engage with decision makers in identifying workable solutions in the area of health and human services policy, family financial security, and science and technology. Pew's environmental work is aimed at halting and ultimately reversing the trends that are threatening nature, through the use of science, law, public education and advocacy in the areas of global warming, conservation of living marine resources, and old-growth forest and wilderness protection. The Pew Center on the States helps advance effective policy approaches to critical issues facing states. The Foundation also works to inform the public on issues and policy makers.
